Consumers, 70% of the economy, are still spending

Consumers continue to spend, but...

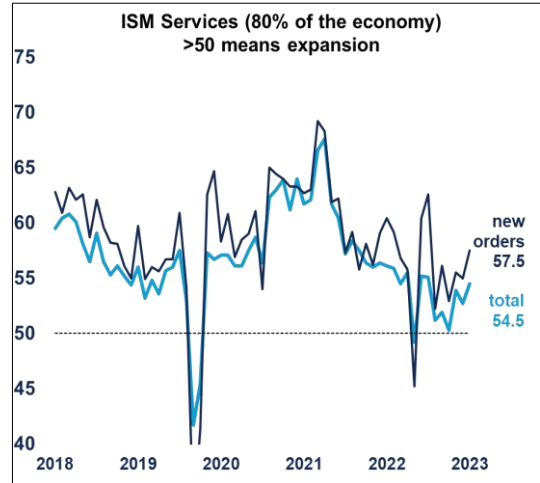

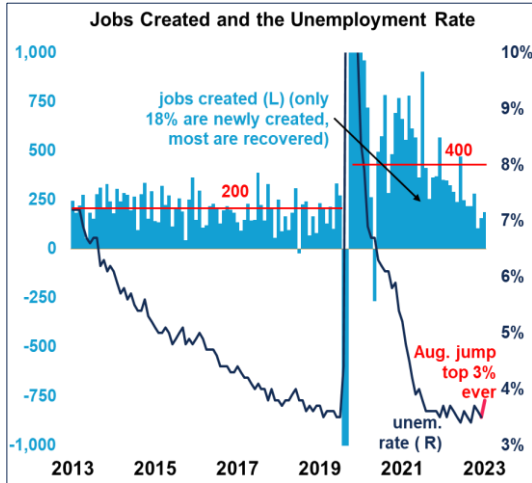

... the income to power it may be fading

Lots of Negatives

Inflation, and the Fed's cure.
How are they damaging the economy?

Some examples we will look at:

- Housing market
- Manufacturing
- Labor market
- Credit
- Bankruptcies

Inflation - the Fed has made a mess

1. The Fed has made its own mess:
 - i. too much easy money for too long – five Qs after emergency conditions were over
 - ii. holding on to “it’s just transitory”
 - iii. and then, after admitting it wasn’t, still continued to loosen policy for four months
2. The Fed started desperately behind the curve.
3. Changes in monetary policy take 3-5 quarters to have full effect.
4. When a central banks raises rates to slow inflation, it is deliberately trying to slow the economy – and it works. That is the risk.
5. Also note the $5T of fiscal stimulus contributed to inflation as well.

Inflation is improving by most measures, but isn't back to 2%, so the Fed has had to stay aggressive

Headline Consumer Price Index (CPI) peaked y/y, now 3.7%; recent increase due to gas. The core rate was more sticky, now falling,

"Supercore" inflation, the Fed's new favorite measure is now declining as well m/m

Inflation decimated wage earners, also forcing the Fed to raise rates aggressively

But has the Fed been too aggressive? Maybe. Here's why.

It takes 3-5 quarters for a rate hike to have full effect. A lot of arrows have already been shot at inflation, and the economy, but haven't even gotten there yet...

... and those that have gotten there have done a lot of damage

In fact Fed actions have already done a lot of damage:

- Retail sales y/y have slowed from 10.2% a year ago to 2.7% now, well below 6% average, and are now negative after inflation
- Housing market shattered
- Manufacturing in recession
- Labor market weakening
- Tightening credit
- Increasing bankruptcies
- Leading indicators point to possibility of recession
- Let's take a look

Housing collapsed when the Fed admitted inflation was not transitory

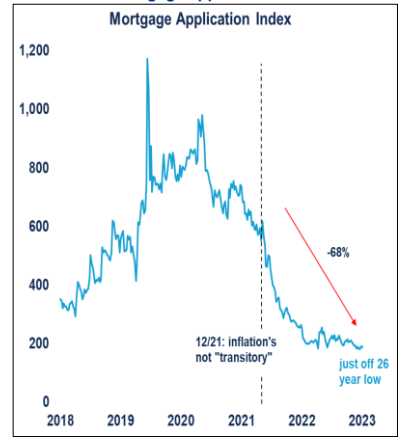

Mortgage rates soared, and sales plummeted...

...starts and permits also fell...

...and mortgage applications crashed

Housing collapsed when the Fed admitted inflation was not transitory

Prices for new homes soared, and even though they have started to fall...

...they are still high, and combined with high mortgages = lowest affordability in 37 years...

Rising rates have also led to banking troubles

Banks are borrowing from all three Fed emergency programs - is there something they know that we don't? Remember, six months ago, the sum of these programs was effectively $0, not $244 B.

Rising rates have also led to banking troubles

Lending standards in Q1 were already tightening before the banking troubles. Credit is bound to tighten further, which will lead to a credit crunch, weighing on the economy

The Fed always raises until something breaks

5 times in the last 30 years...

...many more over the last 100 years...

...and those higher rates will increase bankruptcies

Conclusions

- The economy has signs of strength right now, but ominous indicators for the future.
 - Inflation still killing purchasing power.
 - Housing market significantly damaged.
 - Manufacturing sector in recession.
 - Weakening labor market.
 - Banking troubles and tightening credit.
- The Fed started way behind, and is on a path of aggressive rate hikes to fight inflation, and in the process it will likely strangle the economy as well.
 - Signs suggest significant weakness in Q4-23, Q1-24, and an increase in bankruptcies.
